Welcome to the Global Watch Weekly Report

Dear Global Watch Weekly Member

Secret societies and occult brotherhoods been active behind the scenes of world events for hundreds of years? Do these self-proclaimed guardians of secret wisdom shape the growth of human consciousness and influence the destiny of nations? Are certain secret elites manipulating political, cultural, spiritual and economic movements, in the fulfilment of an ancient plan? Might the great upheavals, wars, and revolutions, along with humanity's pioneering discoveries in science, literature, philosophy and the arts, be the work of a 'hidden hand'? Is an occult war being waged between secret societies? Can we decode history to find the mysterious interface of politics and occultism, thereby uncovering the real creators of our modern world?

The German philosopher Oswald Spengler warned of a "mighty contest" between groups of men of "immense intellect" who the "simple citizen neither observes nor comprehends."

Major-General J.F.C. Fuller, a former disciple of Aleister Crowley, wrote about an insidious force using "Magic and Gold" striving "to gain world domination under an avenging Messiah as foretold by Talmud and Qabalah." Fuller's former chief the 'Great Beast 666' Crowley worked as a spy for Britain. During the First World War, the German Foreign Office secretly requested the occultist Gustav Meyrink to write a novel blaming the Freemasons of France and Italy for the outbreak of war.

In Proofs of a Conspiracy, the British scientist Prof. John Robison documented how the French Revolution sprang from Masonic lodges. Robison claimed the infamous Order of the Illuminati had infiltrated Freemasonry and used the lodges to further a radical agenda, the overthrow of the Church and Monarchs of Europe.

The power of secret societies is generally dismissed by Western academics. Main-stream scholars choose to ignore this aspect of history, believing it is of no significance. However, fifty years ago the perceptive French journalists Louis Pauwels and Jacques Bergier, in their best-selling book Morning of the Magicians, observed:

Our ideas about secret societies are academic; we take a conventional view of extraordinary facts. If we want to understand the world of the future, we shall have to reconsider and refresh our ideas about secret societies by making a more thorough study of the past and discovering a point of view which will render intelligible the phase of history through which we are now passing.

Just over a month and a half ago the Bilderberg conference for 2015 took place in Austria bringing the usual media frenzy and conspiracy hype back into the public mainstream. We investigate the latest insight into the Bilderberger agenda for world domination.

THE BILDERBERG GROUP

When it comes to secretive globalist confabs, nothing quite compares to the Bilderberg Group. Founded in 1954, the first conference was held at the Hotel de Bilderberg in Oosterbeek, Netherlands, with subsequent gatherings adopting the name of the founding venue.

Bilderberg Group attendees are hard to spot and generally like to stay out of the limelight, at least where their Bilderberg activities are concerned. They are like garden gnomes – transient, and only partially visible figures, who seem to live underground. Members see themselves, and each other, as the world's ‘movers and shakers’.

Key founders of the conference include Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands, former Polish resistance leader Józef Retinger, Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands, and Dutch head of Unilever, Paul Rijkens. Since then, Bilderberg has become a who's who of transatlantic luminaries and captains of industry, media and politics, including David Rockefeller, Henry Kissinger, Étienne Davignon, Baron Roll of Ipsden, Walter Scheel, King Juan Carlos of Spain, banking head Josef Meinrad Ackermann, and America's Hillary Clinton and David Petraeus, as well as an assortment of economic bagmen like Paul Volcker, along with Danish Prime Minister Helle Thorning-Schmidt – to name only a few.

ties between Europe and North America in the early days of the Cold War. Bilderberg was also pivotal in the formation of the European Union and the single currency Eurozone.

Bilderberg's post-World War II ascendancy was pivotal in the creation of a number of multi-lateral entities, transnational watershed moments – like the UN, the IMF, the World Bank and even the Bretton Woods Agreement. Each of these forms part of a wider power structure responsible for coordinating most of the wars in the 20th and 21st centuries – in what appears to be a nudging exercise towards world government, and which was also outlined in American scholar and CFR archivist Carroll Quigley's book, Tragedy and Hope.

American writer Jay Dyer explains:

Bilderberg, operating under the guise of ‘free market capitalism’, represents instead the complete culmination of banking corporate world control. It is presented as yet another debate forum, the secretive meetings instead have been revealed in numerous cases to have driven global policy. The most shining example is the 1955 Bilderberg meeting's plans for the creation of the “European Common Market” and “European Union (Unity)”...

For those who still doubt there's a hidden hand steering the current globalist agenda, one only needs to look at the high-powered pursuits of Bilderberg attendees seeking to create a multi-national sovereignty override through global corporate takeover ‘world trade partnerships’ like the Transatlantic Partnership (TTIP) and the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP). Dyer continues:

It is important to recall that the European Common Market came into play some three years later in 1958, while the European Union itself was supposedly founded in 1993. With this in mind, we can see how the TTIP is simply a further extension of the same strategy of economic integration, from the EU to NAFTA.

At Bilderberg, the carefully selected list of around 200 attendees gathers for three to four days

Among other things, it was initially designed to promote the supranational concept of Atlanticism and to strengthen corporate, political and military to hear presentations and hold breakout discussions regarding the 'progress' of business, politics and defence – after which a consensus is formed on the direction that international policy will take over the coming year.

When it's all over, the gnomes of Bilderberg return to their home countries with a fairly precise blueprint from the confab's steering committee as to how to proceed in the coming year. Agents will then push this agenda through their regional confabs like the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission in the US, Chatham House in Great Britain, and the European Commission in Brussels. In essence, the Bilderberg Group functions as a secretive working group for a 'shadow' One World Government.

Group members remain coy about the bigger picture of global government, but at times their true intentions leak out. In 2001, a Bilderberg Group founder and steering committee member for 30 years, Denis Healey, said:

To say we were striving for a one-world government is exaggerated, but not wholly unfair. Those of us in Bilderberg felt we couldn't go on forever fighting one another for nothing and killing people and rendering millions homeless. So we felt that a single community throughout the world would be a good thing.

Many critics in the US and the UK have cited various oversight legislation and civil service codes which are meant to prohibit heads of state or government officials from attending what is a private meeting to discuss and decide policies – far away from the prying eyes and ears of the media and even further away from the accountability of the voting public.

In the US, the Logan Act of 1799 was meant to put the brakes on US officials attending secret meetings like Bilderberg, but in reality the Logan Act is simply ignored as it has no teeth to enforce a code that both parties in the US regularly undermine. In the UK, the ministerial code is meant to restrain members of parliament from attending Bilderberg to cut deals outside of the democratic system, but just like the Logan Act this code is not worth the paper it's written on if both the ruling party and the opposition party are not willing to take each other to task for such a blatant breach of conduct.

“When a meeting, or part thereof, is held under the Chatham House Rule, participants are free to use the information received, but neither the identity nor the affiliation of the speaker(s), nor that of any other participant, may be revealed.”

Bilderberg attendees insist they appear at the annual conference as 'private citizens', not as public officials. It's hard to know exactly what the real story is because attendees are bound to secrecy by observing what is known as 'Chatham House Rules', whereby information disclosed during a meeting may be reported by those who were present, but the source of that information may not be explicitly or implicitly identified. In other words – no transparency and no accountability.

According to pre-eminent Bilderberg researcher Daniel Estulin:

Bilderberg meetings follow a traditional protocol founded in 1919, in the wake of the Paris Peace Conference held at Versailles, by the Royal Institute of International Affairs (RIIA) based at Chatham House in London. While the name Chatham House is commonly used to refer to the Institute itself, the Royal Institute of International Affairs is the foreign policy executive arm of the British monarchy.

According to RIIA procedures: “When a meeting, or part thereof, is held under the Chatham House Rule, participants are free to use the information received, but neither the identity nor the affiliation of the speaker(s), nor that of any other participant, may be revealed; nor may it be mentioned that the information was received at a meeting of the Institute.”

Followers of the alternative media should note here that if not for the work of a few dedicated independent journalists, investigators and also whistleblowers, we might not know as much about Bilderberg as we do today. Chief among the Fourth Estate resistance against the elitist gathering was veteran snoop Jim Tucker from American Free Press. With the help of a 'mole' embedded deep inside the annual gathering, Tucker was able to glean guest lists, meeting agendas, and other tips that gave the alternative media a rough picture of what the meeting was really about and the key players.

On the shoulders of the late Tucker stand recent researchers and authors like Spain's Daniel Estulin, US radio personality Alex Jones and British journalist Tony Gosling – all of whom have worked to report and expose deeper aspects of this elite club, and also its history and ties to some of history's most notorious regimes. Other mainline pundits have since staked a claim to covering the Bilderbergers like Charlie Skelton, a British comedy writer, who has followed Bilderberg for the London Guardian since 2008.

TRACKING THE GNOMES

On the globalist technocrat's annual social calendar, Bilderberg falls just before the G8 (or G7) transatlantic meeting. More often than not it is held in relatively close proximity to the G8, making it easy for globalist operatives and heads of state to attend both meetings in succession. Such has been the relentless coverage and pursuit by the alternative media of Bilderberg that elite planners have been forced to employ various strategic PR maneuvers – not just to avoid being accused of covering up their activities, but also in order to deceive potential snoops long enough to make it difficult to organize major demonstrations.

The Bilderberg paradigm certainly shifted in 2013 when the formerly private meeting effectively 'came out of the closet' by posting what it claimed to be its full guest list and agenda in a major media outlet, the London Telegraph newspaper.

Last year's meeting in 2014 marked the first time the location of the annual meeting was announced by Bilderberg in advance.

Demonstrators hoping to gatecrash the annual embryonic global government confab should take heed that the secretive organization may have deployed a sleight-of-hand deception regarding the actual location of the main conference – in order to herd activists to a secondary location as looks to be the case in London in 2013.

Thousands of Bilderberg demonstrators gathered at Watford's Grove Hotel that summer, and even staged a 'Bilderberg Festival' on the adjacent grounds. Unknown to the alternative media crowd in attendance, the Grove Hotel may have only been an 'R & R', or 'rest and recovery' venue for conference attendees Thursday to Sunday – hosting only social events, golfing and some corporate presentations.

Meanwhile, the real Bilderberg conference appears to have taken place on the other side of London, with steering committee meetings on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday held at the luxury Selsdon Park Hotel resort located in Croydon, South London – a venue with its own heliport and only minutes away from Gatwick International Airport.

TECHNO GNOMES

Controlling the digital chokepoints is key to controlling the globe in the 21st century. In 2013, a sister event was quietly held at the Grove Hotel in Watford right before Bilderberg. That was the annual Google 'Big Tent' event. Many of the attendees of the Google weekender were also present at Bilderberg the following week, and some of the same faces even attended the G8 in Ireland the following week.

What's becoming ever more clear with each passing year is the pre-eminence of tech gurus and Internet moguls, with many now occupying key positions on Bilderberg steering committees. Representatives and heads of firms like Google, Microsoft, Facebook, LinkedIn, Twitter, Paypal, and others, are now permanent fixtures in seats of power.

Among the regular attendees in recent years have been men like Google's former CEO Eric Schmidt, and Peter Thiel, head of digital investment house Clarium Capital, who provided the financial backing for online ventures like Paypal, Facebook, LinkedIn and Friendster. Thiel was promoted to Bilderberg committee head in 2011 and has since emerged as a key influencer in US industrial and political spheres.

These same companies, along with tech giants like Apple, are also steering a highly visible move towards a globalized cashless society – a brave new digital domain where anonymous transactions are banned – and all buying and selling is tracked and analyzed. Not surprisingly, Bilderberg technocrats love the prospects of such a mechanized financial future – one where no one escapes universal taxation and where access can be denied to any citizen who strays off the technocrat's repressive political reservation.

In 2013, Google supplied what appeared to be the Trojan horse needed to implement a global taxation system. Right before Bilderberg, UK political leaders were whipped into a frenzy by the media over Google's alleged tax sins, naturally leaving the public clamoring for a solution. The saying "never let a good crisis go to waste" chimes in well here.

A major UK clash ensued between No. 10 Downing Street and Google over the issue of corporate tax evasion. Google's Matt Brittin was grilled by the UK's Commons Public Accounts Committee (PAC) and its chair Margaret Hodge, who accused Google of "doing evil" by using an elaborate array of offshore entities in a "smoke and mirrors" financial maze designed to avoid paying any significant tax into UK coffers. Both Prime Minister David Cameron and Chancellor George Osborne also publicly accused Google of being "immoral." Meanwhile, Google's Peter Baron claimed the firm was in full compliance with UK law, issuing a public statement: "None of the allegations put to us change the fact that Google pays the corporate tax due on its UK activities and complies fully with UK law."

It was all Punch 'n Judy in the end because the fact of the matter is Google is extremely powerful. With a net worth that trumps some countries and much of the world's commerce, the Google brand wields great power and influence in Britain and everywhere else it seems. Despite all the rhetoric, no British politician could strong-arm Google because behind the scenes both Google and Britain's political elite share a place on central planning's top round table – the Bilderberg Group.

The reality of Bilderberg is much more practical in 2015 than ever before. While the first 60 years of Bilderberg were about establishing a framework for a global government (through 'governance'), now we see the actual implementation of the new control system. UK Column Editor Mike Robinson explains:

"I think that the embryonic global in- situations are already in place, and we're going to see them being given more and more real 'jobs' to do as time goes on, and collecting corporation tax is clearly going to be one of those."

Key in the new control system is the rapid advancement of software and computer processing used to perform tasks which were previously unthinkable and required very large and expensive platoons of expert labour and armies of analysts.

Beyond all of the social media, mobile device and Big Data agendas, however, exists the next key emerging area that Bilderberg would like to steer going forward. That field is the area of artificial intelligence, or 'A.I.'

Jay Dyer explains the true scope of this ambitious endeavour:

...the whispers are this year [Bilderberg will] discuss the implementation and rollout of artificial intelligence. So far, 2015 has seen a tremendous push for the acceptance of automation, from robots in the workplace, to driverless cars, to implantable micro- chips.... what is most difficult to convey is the unified nature of the overall plan, from economic "reform" and "free market shock therapy austerity," to the implementation of the Smart grid/A.I. takeover, to the bio-chemical dysgenics operations, the Atlanticist plans are unified, strategic, and full-spectrum. They cover the entire domain of human experience, as well as the entire biosphere. The transition to 'Smart- Cities' is the ultimate goal of the Green/Agenda 21 plan...

As Bilderberg takes its road show into the 21st century, it's only right (in their eyes anyway) that the Gnomes will do as they did with global government and finance – and direct and steer us into the full implementation of the A.I. smart grid.

THE MASTERS OF WAR

Chief among the concerns of Bilderberg central planners is how and when future wars are going to break out – wars that ultimately allow the ruling elite to reshape the current global structure and control system by instituting a New Order out of chaos.

First and foremost in this challenge is containing the emergence of the BRICS power bloc that currently includes the following nations: Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa. That bloc could grow, and for this reason Bilderbergers will look for ways to undermine and derail the emergence of BRICS and similar organisations like the Shanghai Cooperation Organisation (SCO) currently led by China.

Since 2014, Washington DC and the EU have been very active in undermining regional stability in the Eurasian heartland, mainly by manufacturing a revolution in the Ukraine that forced Russia to protect its own interests in the region. As a result of the chaos in Kiev, Crimea quickly exited the Ukraine and into the strong arms of Mother Russia.

The West, led by NATO's self-assigned military mandate in Europe and Asia (and Africa too, it seems, in the case of the destruction of Libya in 2011), used Crimea's secession from the Ukraine as an excuse to press its military operations further eastward and directly challenge Russia's own sphere of influence and even Moscow's own national security. No doubt all this was discussed and catered for in recent years behind closed doors at Bilderberg, as was the case with similar destabilisation efforts recently in Syria and previously in Yugoslavia.

FRIGHTENED GNOMES

Elected officials meeting in secret to discuss our future (and their future finances) generally goes down very poorly in terms of public opinion. For this reason, Bilderberg likes to keep out of the headlines and far away from public scrutiny.

Ditto for world government, a loathsome construct that would likely be ushered in without any vote being cast by any citizen from the individual countries involved – which is about as undemocratic as it gets. This remains one of the fundamental flaws at the heart of the ultra-liberal utopian ideal that is global government, and thus one of the ultimate flaws of the secretive Bilderberg Group. The fact they must meet in secret and hide during their confab is proof enough that even they are not confident with their plans and dystopic visions of a future technocracy.

Our only chance to stop the Gnomes of Bilderberg is to continue to shine a spotlight on their activities and their agendas – and keep them in the garden where they belong.
