

Global Watch Weekly Report

A Weekly Global Watch Media Publication (www.globalreport2010.com)

July 19th, 2013

NATURE OR MAN-MADE

Global Watch Weekly Report

“The Number one weekly report which provides concrete evidence of a New World Order & One World Government agenda”

www.globalreport2010.com

This is a FREE report. Please pass this on to others who you may feel would benefit from this information. Web site owners please feel free to give this away to your site visitors or email lists

Not yet on our mailing list? Then visit the web site link below and sign up to ensure you don't miss out on these free weekly reports

www.globalreport2010.com

Global Watch Weekly Report

Welcome to the Global Watch Weekly Report

There are some interesting facts related to the pharmaceutical industry that many are not aware of. World War I resulted in the deaths of millions of people. World War II killed tens of millions of people -- not Americans, mind you, but Russians, who ultimately received the greatest number of casualties. Other wars, such as the Vietnam War, resulted in tens of thousands of American deaths, and hundreds of thousands if you look at the total body count. The war on Iraq has now has killed tens of thousands of people as well, most of whom are Iraqi civilians.

But there's another war that is rarely mentioned in the history books that is killing an estimated 12 million people each year around the world. It is an economic war, and a war of control. This war is being waged by the pharmaceutical industry. Today, the industry is being blamed for causing the injury and death of millions of people through the so-called "business with disease", and it is being accused of war crimes before the ICC, the International Criminal Court, in the Hague.

New charges and accusations state that the pharmaceutical industry is committing genocide and was built with the primary goal of controlling health care systems around the world and systematically replacing natural, non-patentable therapies with profitable, synthetic drugs and patentable therapies that could be sold to patients at sky-high prices.

For those new to the argument about what's wrong with the pharmaceutical industry, some of these charges might seem outlandish, but in fact, the history of medicine, even in the United States, is full of evidence that supports such a notion. Most people don't know, for example, that the American Medical Association has twice been convicted of conspiracy in the federal courts of the United States of America. What kind of conspiracy? Conspiracy to suppress non-conventional treatments, most notably chiropractic care

At the turn of the 20th century and throughout the mid-century, the American Medical Association was working very hard to control medicine and outright ban or discredit any therapy that it could not control. In fact, there were assassination attempts made on people who were outspoken against the industry, including a man named Hoxsey, who was a promoter of alternative cancer therapies made with medicinal plants that cured cancer tumors.

Hoxsey was also a great salesman, and he did himself more harm than good by taking on the persona of a snake oil salesman, but there was much merit to his formulas as has now been revealed by scientific analysis of the phytochemicals present in the medicinal plant ingredients he used and advocated. Now, with this accusation of crimes against humanity, U.S. Chief Prosecutor Telford Taylor says,

"The indictment accuses these men for visiting upon mankind the most devastating and catastrophic war in human history."

It is indeed a war against humanity, and it is a war waged for the control of profits, because where there is money to be made, there is power to be grabbed, and the only way the pharmaceutical industry can grab power is by making sure that people don't have access to or don't believe in alternative therapies that could prevent chronic disease or treat disease in more affordable ways.....and also creating man made diseases so that they can test their solutions on the largest clinical trial program in history. The human race.

In this edition we examine the question "are emerging diseases, accidents of nature or man made illnesses?".

www.globalreport2010.com

NATURE OR MAN-MADE

Emerging Diseases: Accident of nature or man-made illnesses?

In the 1970s it was thought that many infectious diseases had been banished from the industrialized world. But with the spectacular rise of genetic engineering over the last two decades, more than 30 new emerging diseases have appeared around the world. Some of the better-known diseases include AIDS, Legionnaire's disease, toxic shock syndrome, Lyme disease, hepatitis C, "mad cow disease", hanta virus, various new encephalitis and hemorrhagic viruses, Lassa fever, and Ebola virus. (New controversial diseases like chronic fatigue syndrome and Persian Gulf War Syndrome affecting veterans, are not included in the CDC's list of emerging diseases.) After 80 years of steady declines in infectious disease, the mortality rate in the U.S. rose 58% between 1980 and 1992.

We blame this on increased global travel and globalization, population growth and movements, deforestation and reforestation programs, human sexuality (in the case of HIV), and increased human contact with tropical mini-forests and other wilderness habitats that are reservoirs for insects and animals that harbor unknown infectious agents. But nowhere in the official list of causes is the fact that for years millions of animals and innumerable vials of infectious material have been shipped around the world for commercial and biological warfare purposes. In addition, we still have to deal with the "old" infectious agents, like anthrax bacteria, which are staples in all biowarfare laboratories.

The anthrax letter mailings that followed the World Trade Center bombings of 9/11/01 were considered a "wake up call" indicating America was unprepared for a bioterrorist attack. To this date, the perpetrators have not been apprehended, and the U.S government's own biowarfare scientists are the #1 prime suspects.

HIV/AIDS: A designer disease with a laboratory virus?

In the 1970s, the decade before AIDS, the U.S. Army's biowarfare program intensified, particularly in the area of genetic engineering research. In 1971, President Richard Nixon transferred a major part of the Army's Biological Warfare Unit at Ft. Detrick over to the National Cancer Institute (NCI). Thereafter, secret biowarfare experimentation continued under the cover of bona-fide cancer research.

During the 1970s the NCI's Special Virus Cancer Program also brought together leading national and international medical scientists in a unified attempt to uncover and genetically alter cancer-causing and immunosuppressive viruses. The genetic manipulation of cells and infectious agents, as well as the mixing and transferring of viruses between various animals (including monkeys, chimps and other primates), resulted in the creation of many man-made infectious agents for research, commercial and biowarfare purposes. At the end of this decade a new immunosuppressive virus (HIV) was introduced into the gay community, the most hated minority in America.

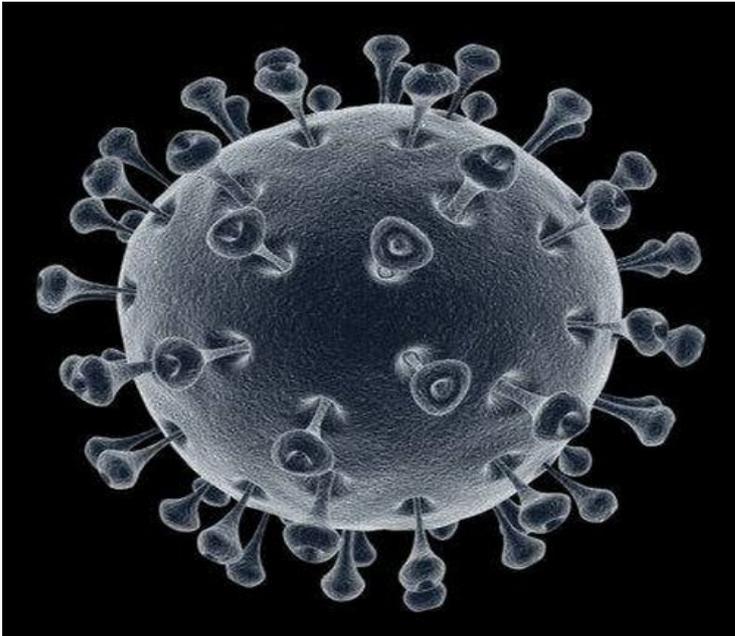

NATURE OR MAN-MADE

Some researchers believe that this Special Virus Cancer Program, with its covert connection to America's biowarfare program, spawned HIV that was subsequently seeded into the black African population via contaminated WHO-sponsored vaccine programs, and seeded into the U.S. homosexual community via the government-sponsored experimental hepatitis B vaccine program (1978-1981).

Not only was HIV introduced, but the virus that causes Kaposi's sarcoma (the "gay cancer" of AIDS) was also seeded into gay men. These hepatitis B experiments in Manhattan, Los Angeles, and San Francisco, utilized only highly promiscuous, healthy white gay and bisexual men as guinea pigs. Shortly after this experiment began, the first cases of "gay-related immune deficiency disease" and "gay cancer" in the form of KS, first erupted in New York City in 1979.

The idea of AIDS as a man-made virus is considered by most scientists to be a joke. Scientists pooh-pooh the idea of a man-made virus, even though the laboratory transfer of viruses from one species to another always results in a man-made virus.

But man-made AIDS is no joke, especially to some American blacks. If you type-in "AIDS conspiracy blacks" on PubMed, it will refer you to a 1999 study polling black people who were asked if they believed "HIV/AIDS is a man-made virus that the federal government made to kill and wipe out black people." [PMID: 10329334] The majority of black people questioned "yes" or "undecided." Interestingly, the higher the education, the more black people were likely to answer yes. The authors concluded that "the prevalence and health-related implications of blacks' AIDS-conspiracy beliefs must be fully investigated."

There is a little-known reason why HIV continues to disproportionately affect gay men and bisexuals in America, and why it is predominantly a heterosexual disease in Africa. It is now recognized that there are 10 different "subtypes" of HIV, which reflect differences in the genetic composition of the AIDS virus. Subtype B is the form of HIV that exists in America; this subtype is not prevalent in Africa. (Another reason to suspect that HIV in America did not originate from Africa and that the U.S. outbreak in gays was distinct from the African outbreak.)

Subtype B in the U.S. spreads more easily with anal sex and IV drug use, whereas the African subtypes spread more easily via heterosexual contact. Dr Max Essex at the Harvard School of Public Health in Boston has demonstrated that subtypes C and E infect and replicate more efficiently than subtype B in certain cells of the vagina, cervix and the foreskin of the penis — but not on the wall of the rectum. Essex contends that these subtypes are spread more efficiently through vaginal intercourse. Subtype B helps explain why the U.S. epidemic spread quickly among homosexual men and IV drug users, while in Africa and Asia, subtypes C and E have spread rapidly among heterosexuals. All these subtypes further suggest that HIV is a manipulated virus introduced by the hand of man, rather than a genetically-diverse virus descended and derived from primates in the African jungle.

NATURE OR MAN-MADE

In sub-Saharan Africa in 2002, there were an estimated 2.4 million AIDS deaths with 3.5 million new infections, and a total of 30 million people in the region living with the infection. Isn't it time the scientific community asked itself if HIV could have evolved from lab experiments and vaccine contaminations, rather than everyone blithely going along with the dubious theory that "some chimpanzee in the jungle did it!"

The new epidemic of West Nile Virus in America

SARS in 2003 follows in the wake of another unprecedented outbreak of West Nile virus in New York City in August 1999, that worsens with each passing year. The first sign of an epidemic of unknown origin occurred in early July when many birds died mysteriously. The virus has an affinity for some species of birds; and the mosquito acts as a vector to spread the virus between birds, humans and other animals. A few weeks after the bird kills, the first human cases of encephalitis appeared in local hospitals. On September 24, it was finally determined that the virus was West Nile virus — a virus that had never been seen in America — and a virus for which there was no testing available in any New York state laboratory.

Although the virus is contagious between birds, the disease is not contagious between humans. Only about 20% of infected people develop a mild flu-like form of the illness; but 1 in 150 people develops a severe form of the disease with mental confusion, headache, swollen glands, high fever, severe muscle weakness, and the tell-tale symptoms of encephalitis (inflammation of the brain).

In 1999, the disease was confined to the New York City area, with 62 cases and 7 deaths. In year 2000, there were 21 cases and two deaths; in 2001 there were 56 cases with 7 deaths. In year 2002, the CDC reported 4156 cases with 284 deaths; and it is estimated that as many as 200,000 people are infected nationally. Inexplicably, as of May 2003, the CDC reports no cases.

Until 2002 the virus was confined to states in the eastern half of the country. By the summer of 2002, all but 6 of the lower 48 states reported WN virus in birds, mosquitoes, animals or humans. Shockingly, it was announced that WN virus was in the nation's blood supply — and there is no blood screening test available to test for the new virus. There is also no treatment or cure for WN virus disease.

West Nile virus: Out of Africa? Or out of a laboratory?

WN virus was first discovered in 1937 in encephalitis cases in Uganda, East Africa. African cases tend to be mild, and the virus there does not affect animal and bird populations to any significant degree. In fact, the ability of the virus to infect and kill birds has only been noticed recently. Mild outbreaks of WN occurred in Israel in 1951-1954 and 1957, and also in South Africa in 1974. However, since the mid 1990s, outbreaks of increasing frequency and severity have appeared in Morocco, Tunisia, Italy, Israel, and Russia, and have been strangely accompanied with a large number of bird deaths. Scientists have determined that the closest viral "relative" of the New York 99 strain of WN virus is a strain of WN virus that circulated in Israel from 1997-2000.

Health authorities claim the virus entered the U.S. via travelers from the Middle East, or via a stray mosquito on an airplane. Other researchers claim the virus arrived with African animals or birds placed in zoos. But, in fact, the WN virus has been housed in U.S. labs for decades (along with African animals), and has been openly sold to researchers around the world. From the very beginning of the WN virus outbreak, there were rumors of bioterrorism, but these rumors were denied by health officials.

Various new theories of origin still appear in the press. For example, a Los Angeles Times editorial (9/28/02) proclaimed that "scientists think (the virus) may have arrived in the early 1980s when Asian tiger mosquitoes traveled in tire casings from Japan to Houston." (One wonders who supplies the press with these bizarre and undocumented stories.)

On September 12, 2002, Vermont Senator Patrick Leahy declared: "I think we have to ask ourselves: Is it a coincidence that we're seeing such an increase in WN virus — or is that something that's being tested as a biological weapon against us." Leahy is no stranger to bioterrorism, having received an anthrax-laden letter at his Washington office a year earlier.

NATURE OR MAN-MADE

Was WN virus deliberately or accidentally seeded into the environment? Could the new outbreaks of WN virus be a result of decades of animal experimentation and manipulation with the African virus. You can see on PubMed, for example, that fragments of West Nile virus were spliced into cowpox virus in 1994 (PMID: 7958993).

In September 2002, some WN patients developed signs and symptoms of polio, even though that disease is caused by a totally different virus. Another reason to suspect laboratory genetic manipulation of WN virus, and/or the mixing of this virus in vaccine preparations?

Secret U.S. military experiments on human populations

It is surprising that the U.S. government quickly eliminated bioterrorism as a cause for HIV, the West Nile and the SARS virus, particularly when the government has a long and well-documented history of radiation and biowarfare experimentation against its own unsuspecting citizens.

In the 1950s the U.S. military planned a project to cripple the Soviet economy by killing horses, cattle, and swine, with biological warfare weapons developed from exotic animal diseases. The laboratory at Plum Island, off the coast of Long Island, New York, is the Army's repository for viruses derived from the world's most dangerous animal diseases. According to Norman Covert, base historian and public information officer at Fort Detrick, only a handful of scientists were aware of this project. "

In many cases there were only maybe five people who knew what was going on in weapons research. People in one lab didn't know what happened in the next lab, and they didn't ask." Details of these Plum Island animal experiments were classified as secret until 1993.

During the 1950s and 60s secret military biowarfare attacks on unsuspecting civilians took place in many parts of America. The most notorious was a six-day attack on San Francisco in which clouds of potentially harmful bacteria were sprayed over the city. Twelve people developed pneumonia due to the infectious bacteria, and one elderly man died from the attack. This attack was not revealed to the public until years later when classified documents were finally released.

In other classified experiments, the military sprayed bacteria in New York City subways, in a Washington D.C. airport, and on highways in Pennsylvania. Biological warfare testing also took place in military bases in Virginia, In Key West (Florida), and off the coasts of Southern California and Hawaii.

In preparing America for nuclear attack during the Cold War years following World War II, thousands of U.S. citizens were used as unsuspecting guinea pigs in over 4,000 secret and classified radiation experiments conducted by the Atomic Energy Commission and other agencies, such as the Department of Defense, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Public Health Service (now the CDC), the National Institutes of Health, the Veterans Administration, the CIA and NASA. (See my article , "The Human Radiation Experiments; How scientists secretly used US citizens as guinea pigs during the Cold War", New Dawn, Sept 2001.)

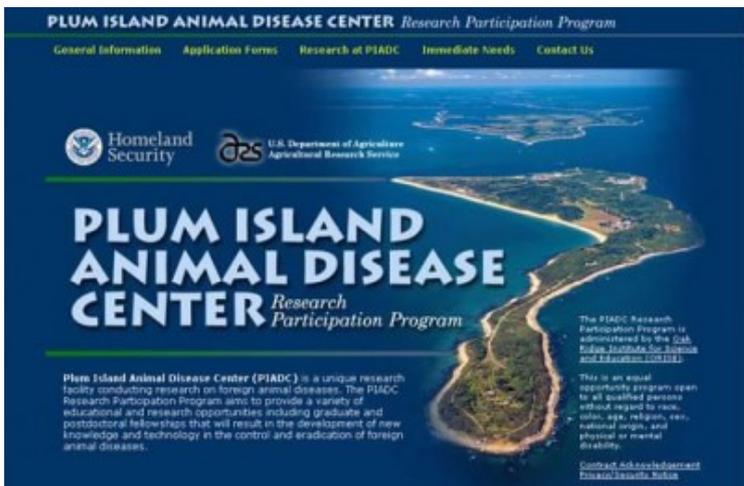

The full extent of the U.S. government's experiments on unsuspecting people will probably never be known because many incriminating documents remain Top Secret or classified. Other documents are often declared as missing, destroyed, or "unavailable", in an attempt to hide the truth from the public.

Not only is the public kept ignorant of biowarfare research, but biowarfare "accidents" are officially covered-up, downplayed, and frequently blamed on animals. For example, the Russians finally revealed the truth about an epidemic of anthrax that caused at least 68 deaths in 1979 in the city of Sverdlovsk, 850 miles east of Moscow. The outbreak was officially blamed on eating meat from infected animals. In 1992, Russian president Boris Yeltsin finally acknowledged the real truth. The cause was not "natural", but due to the accidental escape of spores of weapons-grade anthrax produced by the nearby biowarfare installation.

NATURE OR MAN-MADE

It is surprising that the U.S. government quickly eliminated bioterrorism as a cause for HIV, the West Nile and the SARS virus, particularly when the government has a long and well-documented history of radiation and biowarfare experimentation against its own unsuspecting citizens.

In the 1950s the U.S. military planned a project to cripple the Soviet economy by killing horses, cattle, and swine, with biological warfare weapons developed from exotic animal diseases. The c, off the coast of Long Island, New York, is the Army's repository for viruses derived from the world's most dangerous animal diseases. According to Norman Covert, base historian and public information officer at Fort Detrick, only a handful of scientists were aware of this project. "In many cases there were only maybe five people who knew what was going on in weapons research. People in one lab didn't know what happened in the next lab, and they didn't ask." Details of these Plum Island animal experiments were classified as secret until 1993.

During the 1950s and 60s secret military biowarfare attacks on unsuspecting civilians took place in many parts of America. The most notorious was a six-day attack on San Francisco in which clouds of potentially harmful bacteria were sprayed over the city. Twelve people developed pneumonia due to the infectious bacteria, and one elderly man died from the attack. This attack was not revealed to the public until years later when classified documents were finally released.

In other classified experiments, the military sprayed bacteria in New York City subways, in a Washington D.C. airport, and on highways in Pennsylvania. Biological warfare testing also took place in military bases in Virginia, In Key West (Florida), and off the coasts of Southern California and Hawaii.

In preparing America for nuclear attack during the Cold War years following World War II, thousands of U.S. citizens were used as unsuspecting guinea pigs in over 4,000 secret and classified radiation experiments conducted by the Atomic Energy Commission and other agencies, such as the full extent of the U.S. government's experiment unsuspecting people will probably never be known because many incriminating documents remain Top Secret or classified. Other documents are often declared as missing, destroyed, or "unavailable", in an attempt to hide the truth from the public.

Not only is the public kept ignorant of biowarfare research, but biowarfare "accidents" are officially covered-up, downplayed, and frequently blamed on animals. For example, the Russians finally revealed the truth about an epidemic of anthrax that caused at least 68 deaths in 1979 in the city of Sverdlovsk, 850 miles east of Moscow. The outbreak was officially blamed on eating meat from infected animals. In 1992, Russian president Boris Yeltsin finally acknowledged the real truth. The cause was not "natural", but due to the accidental escape of spores of weapons-grade anthrax produced by the nearby biowarfare installation.

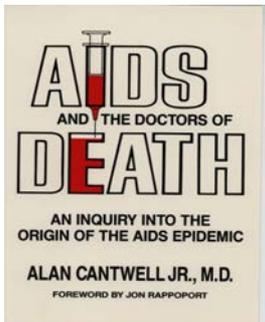

Why are all these man-made viruses being created?

The Human Genome Project has been heralded in science and in the media as a project to save mankind. By mapping and swapping our human genes, scientists are trying to save us from illness, cancer and genetic defects. However, it doesn't take Einstein to figure out that the same technology can be used to make people sick, as well as healthy. For obvious reasons, this fact is never mentioned.

NATURE OR MAN-MADE

Molecular biologists claim these genetic experiments are needed for vaccine development, gene therapy, and disease cures. Most people do not know that animal cells are used in the development and production of certain vaccines. And every new emerging virus and emerging disease, there is big money to be made by pharmaceutical companies, biotech companies, biologists, vaccine makers, the entire health industry, and stockholders. Health agencies, and worldwide health agencies like the WHO, all have close ties to the pharmaceutical cartels, who in turn are closely allied with world governments and big business. Let's face it: ever since the WHO took over the health of the planet, the health of the planet has steadily deteriorated.

When the book "AIDS and the Doctors of Death" was published in 1988, it detailed the dangers of vaccines and genetic engineering and provided extensive circumstantial evidence that AIDS was man-made. In 1989 the book so incensed WHO officials, who were sponsors of the fifth international AIDS Conference in Montreal, that they demanded the book be removed from the shelves of an exhibit run by the Highway Bookshop, thus effectively banning the book from the conference.

Dr. David Heymann is the current executive director of the WHO Communicable Disease Program. Back in 1992 Heymann was asked by Rolling Stone's reporter Tom Curtis if the possibly contaminated experimental polio vaccines given to Africans back in the 1950s might have caused HIV to erupt there. Heymann answered: "The origin of the AIDS virus is of no importance to science today. Any speculation on how it arose is of no importance." (Quoted in "Queer Blood", p 79.)

Government health agencies have little interest in uncovering possible man-made origins of any emerging disease because such an investigation could compromise covert biowarfare activities. The WHO is no exception. In reality, the WHO (in its own mission statement) "cooperates" with government agencies like the U.S. Department of Defense, which funds the U.S. biological warfare program.

On February 12, 2003, while the Chinese were hiding the SARS outbreak, the U.S. National Academies' National Research Council issued a draft report estimating that 11,000 people died from cancer related to nuclear testing during the Cold War. The government admitted that radioactive fallout exposed virtually everyone in the U.S. to radiation and contributed to the cancer deaths. The study, performed by the CDC and NCI, has not yet been formally published. After a half-century, the "good doctors" finally admitted the truth.

Biological Warfare: Who cares?

Most people don't give a damn about biological warfare. Even people who suffer from emerging diseases often don't have a clue about research pointing to man-made diseases; and if you try and educate them about biowarfare and unethical medical experimentation, most people don't want to know. In the nuclear arsenal of the world's major powers is enough explosive power to completely destroy the planet.

Yet strong nations are still not content and want newer and better agents of mass destruction and biowarfare. As time goes by, the "old stuff" gets sold off to poorer countries, and all of it is subject to thievery by terrorists and genocidal scientists.

Biotechnology is wedded to world power and military defense; people who work in these fields are sworn to secrecy and whistle-blowers can land in jail, or worse. Government health authorities all have the same "official story" and their "expert" views are dutifully recounted by adoring media-controlled journalists. Contrary views are not considered. Researchers must rely on government or pharmaceutical grants, and trouble-makers with "politically and scientifically incorrect" views find themselves quickly out of a job and a career.

How many more wake up calls with bioterrorism are required before health officials stop looking in rain forests and animal populations for the origin of these new epidemic diseases—and begin to look at the world trade in deadly infectious agents and laboratory animals, and the insanities of genetic research, as reasons for our new plagues? Biowarfare agents are designed solely to maim or kill large numbers of civilians. And any country that is willing to employ and deploy these agents should be fully aware of the old adage: What Goes Around, Comes Around.

NATURE OR MAN-MADE

So what does the future hold for us with all these coming plagues? Is it too late to educate people and get governments to start behaving responsibly by not supporting biowarfare insanity—and recognizing it when it appears? The pessimist says “no.” The optimist says “maybe.”

“and there was a pale green horse. The horseman on it was named Death, and Hades was following after him. Authority was given to them, over a fourth of the earth, to kill by the sword, by famine, by plague, and by the wild animals of the earth.” Revelation 6:8

“For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places.” Matthew 24:7

It is no secret that the Bible has made specific prophecies regarding a major rise in hideous disease outbreaks that would impact mankind significantly as we move closer towards the end of this age.

Characteristically, the apostle John describes the fourth horse and rider using a paucity of verbiage: The horse is “pale,” the rider’s name is “Death,” and “Hades” follows him. This is the extent of the biblical description, yet even so, these provide us with sufficient clues to deduce a cogent interpretation.

First, the horse’s coat is a unique and otherworldly pale. The Greek word is chlooros, which we recognize as the origin of such English words as “chlorine,” “chloroform,” and “chlorophyll.” It technically refers to a greenish-yellow color found in nature in the pale green of just-sprouted grass or new leaves (see Mark 6:39; Revelation 8:7; 9:4; these are chlooros’ only other occurrences in the New Testament).

Secular Greek writers, however, did not confine chlooros just to sprouting plants. In The Iliad, Homer describes fearful men’s faces with this term, suggesting a pallid, ashen color, and in other instances, it is the pale golden color of honey or the gray bark of an olive tree. Sophocles writes that it is the color of sand, while Thucydides applies it to the skin color of those suffering from plague.

It is this last description that is probably John’s intended meaning; the color of the horse reminded him of the pale, greenish-gray color of a corpse or decaying flesh. The Phillips translation renders chlooros as “sickly green in color”; the New English and the Revised English Bibles, as “sickly pale”; the New Jerusalem Bible, as “deathly pale”; and the New Living Translation, as “pale green like a corpse.” The fourth horse sports a coat only producers of horror movies would love!

Upon the back of this gruesome beast sits one whose name is “Death.” This is another unique feature of this horseman, as none of the others receives a name. The Greek word is the normal word for “death,” thánatos, suggesting on the surface a generic application of the term. However, this would be jumping to a conclusion, for the term is probably meant to be understood more specifically as “pestilence” or “disease.”

The evidence for this meaning here derives primarily from the Greek translation of the Old Testament called the Septuagint. In several places, the Septuagint translators rendered the Hebrew word deber, meaning “pestilence” or “disease,” as thánatos. For instance, in Exodus 5:3, Moses and Aaron tell Pharaoh, “Please let us go three days’ journey into the desert and sacrifice to the LORD our God, lest He fall upon us with pestilence [Hebrew deber; Greek thánatos] or with the sword.” This combination of translations also occurs in the fifth plague, that of the murrain or cattle disease: God tells Moses to inform Pharaoh, “There will be a very severe pestilence” (Exodus 9:3; see also verse 15). In a later instance, God warns Judah through Jeremiah, “I will send . . . pestilence among them, till they are consumed from the land that I gave to them and their fathers” (Jeremiah 24:10).

The most convincing piece of evidence for thánatos meaning “pestilence” in this passage comes from the mouth of Jesus in the Olivet Prophecy, as he describes the events leading up to His return. He prophesies to his disciples, “And there will be famines [third seal or horseman], pestilences [fourth seal or horseman], and earthquakes in various places” (Matthew 24:7). He does not use thánatos but loimós, which literally means “pestilence” or “disease.” Once Jesus Himself weighs in, there is no argument. The pale rider brings death by disease. Interestingly enough Revelation also mentions by the “wild animals” of the earth. Could this be a reference to sicknesses passing from animals to humans and causing widespread pandemics?.